Life&Style You go, girl!

Carrie Bradshaw would be proud. The popular character played by Sarah Jessica Parker on "Sex and the City" questioned in a Season 6 episode why women, if they chose to stay single, got nothing while friends who got married or had babies could register for gifts like china sets and strollers. The Well-Heeled Society, www.wellheeledsociety.com, allows women to customize a registry based on personal achievements, such as a promotion or beating breast cancer.

BeJane.com bills itself as the first online community to provide women with the resources and education needed to have confidence in home improvement. The site features such topics as tackling simple home repair projects and creating the ultimate romantic bedroom.
